

Past

By Cassandra Parker

Four sets of thirty-

I counted-

since your bed knew my shape.

I remember the moving shadows that decorated the window drapes

as our bodies transcended time and space.

There isn't a way to delete the memories of tangled sheets, our limbs linked together in sleep.

Rid me of the chest ache that reverberates your name.